THE COCKADE.

"Mon Dieu, Mme. Manchabell, why did you wear such a long face in the palace of the doges? Did Tamagno's acting affect you so seriously?"

"It is true, the Republican candidate won in the Eighth arrondissement, but how could that possibly interest you?"

"How, M. Pompon? You ask how it could possibly interest me, who have lived on terms of intimacy with princes and barons, who cherish the tender recollections that the Emperor Napoleon III pinched my chin when I was playing 'Gi-sela'! I would have given my most valued mementos to have elected the Conservative, and if he was not elected it is the fault of my daughter, Judith, and her infernal cockade!"

"The import of your words is somewhat nebulous, worthy lady. Tell me the story of the infernal cockade."
"Well, last year Judith, put out at not being able to find her carriage at the conclusion of the races, wrote to M. Lepine, the prefect of the police, for one of those green tickets, called 'cut the lines,' which allow carriages to take up their position near the grand stand. M. Lepine sent no answer."

"You must excuse him, Mme. Manchabell. He is very busy."

"But coming home she had an idea."

"Ah, she had an idea! Really?"
"She had noticed that at the 11 o'clock mass at St. Philippe-du Roule a certain carriage took precedence of all others and stood wherever it pleased, simply because the coachman wore a tricolored cockade in his hat. Upon inquiry she learned it was the coupe of the wife of the president, Mme. Felix Faure. 'Goodness! This is easy!' said Judith to herself. 'I will decorate my coachman, Baptiste, with a tri-colored cockade.'"

"It was a flash of genius!"
"We sent Baptiste's hat to the president's hatter in the Faubourg St. Honore, and it came back with a superb tricolored cockade on it at the price of 6 francs."

"A mere trifle!"
"It proved a cheap investment from the very first. We went wherever we wanted.
People were always taking off their hats to us. I graciously bowed back in return.
I am accustomed to it. I was born so close to a throne that I was just as much at my ease as though I was sitting in my armchair in the Rue de Provence. The police, the soldiers—everybody—made way for us, and Judith's coupe stopped even before the gate at the races, which is prohibited to everybody else. Unfortunately there is always jealousy to be reckoned with. Little Chignon, the third cory-phee, who came in a cab, said one day:

"I would like to know why that old thing can go where we can't!"

"Why," said the policeman, "that is the wife of the minister of public works with her daughter."

"The devil it is! It is old woman Manchabell of the opera and her offspring.
I know her well. We live in the same house."

"I don't know what the guardian of the peace responded, but some days later Judith was sent for by the commissaire of police of the Rue d'Assolvi, who told her she would have to suppress the tricolored cockade or suffer administrative penalty."

"Did Judith yield?"

"Yield, M. Pompon! You do not know us. We have a combative temperament!
I said to my daughter, 'Go and see the celebrated advocate of the court of appeals, Cesar Marius, and he will advise you what to do.' Then Judith put on a blue serge gown, the body trimmed with gulpure; for a hat, a toque trimmed with black lace and two gray feathers, a quite fashionable costume, matching well with the coupe and Baptiste's cockade. In a short time she was in the Rue Partalis a distinguished lawyer's. She entered his private office and laid bare."

"This is becoming interesting."

"She laid bare the facts, M. Pompon.
Maitre Cesar Marius, very much amused at the recital, consulted the code, the police ordinances and the old revolutionary decrees, then said:

"Mademoiselle, there exists in Paris a custom according to which, up to the present, the tricolored cockade has been reserved for the chief of the state ministers, marshals of France and a few high administrative officials, but in truth it is only a custom. The tricolored cockade is the national cockade, and there is no good reason why it should not be worn by all Frenchmen. However, I will look into the matter further. Come to see me again —often, very often. We will talk about your cockade."

"And did Judith go often to see Maitre Cesar Marius?"

"To be sure. She was obliged to follow his advice, was she not? During these periods of consultation, sometimes quite protracted, the coupe remained in front of the distinguished advocate's door, exciting the curiosity of the street loungers, persuaded that a moment later they were going to see the minister of foreign affairs or the president himself, but their disappointment was not so great when they saw Judith come out, and they generally greeted the Conservative play actress with looks of approval."

"On the day before the election all the walls were covered with this red poster:
'Warning! Citizens, you are deceived!
Maitre Cesar Marius, who covets the heritage of the honorable M. Riant and who wants to re-establish himself with the Conservative party, has sold out to the government. It is notorious that for the last month he has been receiving ministerial visits, and the minister is shameless enough to leave his carriage stand in front of the candidate's door. Let him deny it if he can!'"

"Frankly, Maitre Marius could not say to the voters: 'It was not the minister who came to see me. It was the little Manchabell.' He is too gallant a man for that.
Consequently there was a division among the Conservatives, the votes were scattered and wasted, and the Republican candidate was elected. That is the reason why I have tears in my eyes, M. Pompon. Oh, these politics!"—Cincinnati Post.

Mr. C. W. MACFARLANE—It affords me pleasure to recommend, to any one whose hair is falling out, the use of DR. POTTIE'S HAIR OIL. My hair was coming out at such a rate as led me to believe that I would soon become bald. After using the oil for five weeks this ceased entirely; none whatever is now falling out. I consider it the best and only worthy remedy for this trouble so recommend it as a stimulant to new growth.
